The pref. being unlimited in use, only a selection of the existing vbs & derivative wds is here given. Adj. in -able, -ed, & -ing, are identical in form with wds in UN-, with or without material difference in meaning; undoable, unstrap-pable, may mean 'that can be undone, unstrapped', or 'that cannot be done, strapped'; unbracing may mean 'that unbraces' or 'that does not brace'; an unbending person is one fond of or averse to relaxation; an uncoiled rope must be coiled before it can be uncoiled; an unbridled horse may (un-) or may not (UN-) have been previously bridled, in either case he is now unbridled. Un-¹, repr. OE un-, OS, OHG, Goth. un-, ON ú-, ó-, corresp. to L in-¹, Gk an-, a-, Skr. an-; pref. giving neg. sense to adj. with their derivative nn. & adv., & to a miscellaneous group of nn. not formed on adj.; see (2).

1. Of the many adj. formed with un-, esp. of those in -able, -ed, -ing, for which cf. UN-¹, only a selection is here given. The sense of un- is either simply 'not' (as in most adj. in -able, -ed, -ing, & in some others, as unofficial) or more commonly 'the reverse of', with implication of praise, blame, etc. Between un- & in-¹ a differentiation has been suggested according to which inartistic means 'contrary to rules of art', 'such as an artist would condemn', & unartistic means 'not concerned with rules of art'; & pairs of words may be found that bear out the distinction, esp. where one of the pair has long been restricted to the proposed sense & the other has been created or revived to supply its deficiencies (immoral, unmoral). But the purely neutral sense thus ascribed to un- is not that found in many of the most familiar adj. (unbeautiful, unfair, ungraceful, ungracious, unkind, unjust, ungenerous, untrue, unscrupulous, unmanly, unscholarly, unladylike, unchristian), including some of the exact type of unartistic (unscientific, unphilosophical): when we say that a thing is untrue, we do not mean that it does not matter for our purpose whether it is true or not, but that it is culpably inconsistent with truth. Apart from the adj. in -able, -ed, -ing, both un- & in- more commonly have this implication of blame etc., the purely neutral sense being often given by NON-⁵. IN-¹ is preferred to un- with certain terminations of L orig., e.g. -ale, -ile, -ant, -ent, -ble (exc. -able, now a living E suf.). It is for the most part arch. with -ed¹¹ (indigested etc., but cf. inexperienced), and is not used with -ing, -ful, -like, -ly, etc. Derivatives in -ly, -ness, -ity, etc., are briefly recorded; stress follows that of the simple adj.; but for adj. in -ed see UN-¹.

APPENDIX I

GENERAL ABBREVIATIONS

(For list of special abbreviations used in text see pp. xiv-xvi)

ABBREVIATIONS are made chiefly in two ways. (1) The beginning of the word is given, and at any point (after one letter, after all but one letter, or anywhere between) it is cut short with a full stop; so N. = North, Liv. = Livy, syn. = synonym; the full stop serves to announce that it is needless to go further with the word. (The mathematical abbreviations for cosecant, cosine, cotangent, secant, sine, and tangent, namely cosec, cos, cot, sec, sin, and tan, are used without the full stop. Sometimes, as in ENSA and SCAPA, the full stop is omitted between the letters.) (2) Some portion of the middle of the word is dropped out, the first and last letters being retained with or without others between; so wt = weight, hrs = hours, exrx = executrix, Abp = Archbishop; the writing of a full stop at the end of these on the analogy of that in (1), though now usual, is to be deprecated; it is not a natural device (as in (1)), but artificial; it has very rarely the merit of announcing that the letters printed are not a full word, since that is nearly always clear without it (caps for capitals is one of the few exceptions); and it has always the demerit of failing to let the reader know that in the riddle he is called upon to read the last as well as the first letter is given him. There is also a mixed class in which the full stop at the end does convey that the end of the word is missing, but without implying (as in (1)) that all the letters up to that point are present; such are eg. = c(enti)g(ram), cf. = c(on)f(er), avdp. = av(oir)d(up)(ois); the first two of these consist of the initial letters of their words' etymological elements, the last gives the first letter followed by such of the consonants as may suggest the general sound.

The method adopted in the following list is to omit the otiose full stop in accordance with the view expressed above; it is, however, to be understood that all abbreviations here given without the full stop may also be, and more frequently are, used with it. The U.S. State names and those of British counties should be mentioned; in the former we give the full stop or omit it as explained above (Vt, Va, Ky, for Vermont, Virginia, Kentucky; Mass., O., Oreg., for Massachusetts, Ohio, Oregon); in the latter we write the full stop after the 's' (Yorks., Leics., Berks., etc.) as representing shire. Viz and oz are preferred to viz. and oz. on the ground that the z itself represents a written terminal flourish.

APPENDIX II

PRONUNCIATION OF NON-ENGLISH WORDS

THE words in the following Appendix list are those containing sounds that (like the French nasals and the Scottish ch) are non-English and therefore not covered by our notation. In this appendix they are arranged in three lists: the words in their ordinary form; the anglicized pronunciation, denoted by the same symbols as those used throughout the dictionary, but with extra symbols to represent the unEnglish sounds; and the foreign pronunciation in the alphabet of the Société Phonétique Internationale.

CONSONANTS

In the anglicized pronunciation the new symbol to be noted is ch, which is used here to represent a soft guttural sound between sh and k, heard in Scottish words like loch and common in German.

In the International Phonetic alphabet the consonants have their usual values, except the following:

j	is the sound in Eng. young	ʒ	is the sound in Eng. vision
ɲ	" " Fr. digne	x	" " Scottish and German loch .
ʃ	" " Eng. shout

VOWELS

The nasal vowels characteristic of French are pronounced 'through the nose', that is, with the soft palate at the back of the mouth lowered so that the breath passes through the nasal passages. The nasal vowels are four; and are approximately the nasalized forms of the vowels in English at, art, all, earl. In the anglicized pronunciation they are denoted by añ, ahñ, awñ, ērñ, in the phonetic alphabet by ẽ ã õ œ. These vowels are all heard in the phrase 'un bon vin blanc' (ẽ bõ vẽ blã).

The vowels in the International Phonetic alphabet are as follows:

a	as in Fr. patte	o	as in Fr. note
ɑ	" pas	ɔ	" bon (= nasalized aw)
ã	" ban (= nasalized ah)	œ	" peu
e	" dé	œ̃	" seul
ɛ	" fait	œ̃̃	" brun (= nasalized er)
ɛ̃	" fin (= nasalized ã)	u	" tout
ə	" de (obscure)	y	" pu
i	" ni	ɥ	" buis
o	" beau

denotes that the preceding syllable is long.

APPENDIX III

PRONUNCIATION OF PROPER NAMES

THIS list is intended as a guide to the pronunciation of some difficult proper names frequently met with. It makes no claim to completeness, and many geographical names in particular have had to be omitted.

One or two general points may perhaps be noted here: Classical names ending in -es are usually pronounced (-êz). In New Zealand and most newly colonized countries all native names are pronounced with all vowels sounded (and pronounced as Italian vowels, i.e. a = ah, e = â or ê, i = î or î, u = oo). The U.S. pronunciation of some American place-names differs from the usual English pronunciation; in the following list such specifically U.S. pronunciations are preceded by an asterisk. There are many proper names (e.g. Kerr, Smyth) the pronunciation of which varies according to the family or individual referred to; such names have usually been omitted.

The following symbols have been employed in indicating pronunciation, in addition to those in the body of the work:

x = ch in the Scottish pronunciation of loch.

g = 'soft' g in ginger.

n indicates that the preceding vowel is nasalized.
